ART

RAM exhibit highlights work by Gunderson, Sorensen

RACINE — The Racine Art Museum, 441 Main St., will bring together the work of two acclaimed artists, Karen Gunderson and Barbara Sorensen, who call Racine their hometown. “Karen Gunderson: Reflective” and “Barbara Sorensen: Elemental” opens Sunday, Feb. 3, and continues through April 14.

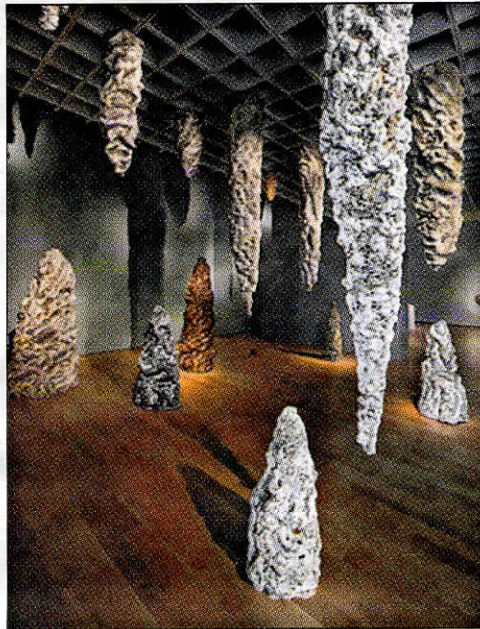

While one prefers to create paintings and the other sculpture, both Gunderson and Sorensen present insightful and poetic reflections of the natural world. Gunderson’s all black paintings of water, constellations and mountains seem to shimmer and change depending on the angle from which they are viewed. Sorensen’s large-scale mixed media sculptures evoke tide pools, sand dunes and topographical formations.

These exhibitions are presented intermingled in one gallery space, allowing for a “conversation” between the individual objects.

A “Meet the Artists” event will be held from 6 to 8 p.m. Friday, March 22. A discussion is at 7 p.m. Admission is $10, free for RAM members.

The Racine Art Museum is open from noon to 5 p.m. Sunday and 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. Tuesday through Saturday. Admission is $5 for adults and $3 for seniors and youth ages 12-18. There is no charge for children ages 11 and younger.

“Speleothem X” by Barbara Sorensen was made from aluminum, polyurethane and resin.

“Bridge into the Night” by Karen Gunderson is an oil painting on linen.

Printmakers to show work at Arts Council

RACINE — “Pressing-On: An Exploration in Local Printmaking” will open with a reception from 6 to 9 p.m. Friday, Feb. 1, at the Racine Arts Council ArtSpace Gallery, 316 Sixth St. The exhibit continues through March 23.

The Black-Eyed Press exists to bring art to the community and the community to art through printmaking and book arts. Printmakers Stacey Piper Milkie, Kollis Branch, Jenie Gao, Sharon Giesfeldt and Samira Gdisis will introduce many different styles and techniques in printmaking including intaglio, woodcut, linocut relief, wood engraving and monotype, as well as covering various topics and subject matter.

The Racine Arts Council is open from noon to 4 p.m. Fridays and Saturdays.
